In the story which was written by Wallace Irwin, plucky "Piosa" gets an elephant and has it painted to advertise her cold cream "Angel Bloom." It was easy to obtain an elephant from a Los Angeles 200 but not seasy to have him appear pink. Director Schertzinger and the camera men and property men racked their brains.

Not many people want a white elephant on their hands, but these leophed did, and the owners of Eno, the elephant, would not permit her to be white-washed or painted. So they tried covering her with flour. But about the time she was nicely coated. Eno would shake her hide as though she was doing a shimmy, and off would come all the flour.

It kept a force of property men busy all morning applying fresh flour. Eno developed a liking for the stuff and kept sucking it off with her trunk. Once, when the trainer's back was turned, she reached for a brush on the ground and began methodically brushing herself. It caused a roar of laughter from the spectators. Eno was as much interested in the picture as anybody, and seemed to enjoy making it.

"The Real Remedy" Is Type of Comedy Playlet That Sticks in One's Memory.

Once in a while there is produced in vaudeville a playlet or sketch whose originality in conception and treatment of theme leaves such a strong impression that the production fixes itself in one's memory. Such a playlet is offered Florence Henry and company, in a comedy playlet of happiness, "The Real Remedy," which will head the program at Loew's Lyceum, opening Sunday. Plorence Henry is proving berself to be a fine-dramatic artist as well as a remarkable character actress. Other acts on this program will include Charles J. Burkhardt and Sam Roberts, in an original skit, blended with new melodies and conversational humor, "The Cop and the Wise Guy." Their nonsense and amusing song numbers are eleverly conceived and most delightfully presented.

Glenn Carl and Dolly Ines offer an amusing skit, with snappy and witty dislogue, and several song numbers, intermingled with acrobatic and eccentric dance specialities.

Helen Miller, "The Xylophone Girl," renders classical and popular selections. "Parfor, Bedroom and Bath," feature picture, is a story of a young wife who wanted a wild husband. It is a Loew-Meiro production presented by an all-star cast.
